

WOMEN EDUCATORS IN THE
PROGRESSIVE ERA

WOMEN EDUCATORS IN THE
PROGRESSIVE ERA
THE WOMEN BEHIND DEWEY'S LABORATORY
SCHOOL

Anne Durst

palgrave
macmillan

WOMEN EDUCATORS IN THE PROGRESSIVE ERA

Copyright © Anne Durst, 2010.

Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 2010 978-0-230-61073-6

All rights reserved.

® in the

First published in 2010 by PALGRAVE MACMILLAN

United States - a division of St. Martin's Press LLC, 175 Fifth Avenue,
New York, NY 10010.

Where this book is distributed in the UK, Europe and the rest of the World, this is by Palgrave Macmillan, a division of Macmillan Publishers Limited, registered in England, company number 785998, of Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS.

Palgrave Macmillan is the global academic imprint of the above companies and has companies and representatives throughout the world.

Palgrave® and Macmillan® are registered trademarks in the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and other countries.

ISBN 978-1-349-37654-4 ISBN 978-0-230-10995-7 (eBook)

DOI 10.1057/9780230109957

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Durst, Anne.

Women educators in the progressive era : the women behind Dewey's Laboratory School / Anne Durst.

p. cm.

1. University of Chicago. University Elementary School.
  2. Women educators—United States—History.
  3. Education—United States—Experimental methods. I. Title.
- LD7501.C4C58 2010
371.10082/0977311—dc22 2009050859

Design by Integra Software Services

First edition: July 2010

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction: The Laboratory School Community	1
1 John Dewey and the Beginnings of the Laboratory School	9
2 “Venturing in Education”: Four Laboratory School Teachers	25
3 The “Union of Intellectual Freedom and Cooperation”: Organizing the Laboratory School Community	45
4 Teachers as Researchers: Developing a Course of Study	69
5 The Laboratory School and the Context of Progressive Era Experimentation	97
6 Implications of the Laboratory School Experiment	125
Notes	147
Bibliography	217
Index	235

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I have been working happily on my study of the Laboratory School teachers for close to a decade. My first debt of gratitude, among many, is to the original Laboratory School community for their willingness to chart new educational territory, and for their assiduous recordkeeping of this pioneering work. Not only did they write reports and publish articles, they also wrote delightful letters. One of my greatest pleasures in this project has been meeting several of the teachers' relatives. I met William Bardeen, grandson of Althea Harmer Bardeen, and Mary Hill Swope, Rachel Abbott, and the Abbott children, descendants of Mary Hill Swope. Kevin Swope kindly shared his knowledge of the Swope family in phone conversations, and David Swope communicated with me by email. These family members gave generously of their time and memories and provided me with a living link to these remarkable teachers. William Bardeen showed me the beautiful album of photographs of the Bardeen family taken by the photographer Eva Watson Schutze, a friend of Althea Harmer Bardeen. Kevin Swope sent me wonderful Hill and Swope family photographs. And Mary Hill Swope informed me of a recent donation she made of her grandmother's letters—which turned out to be a crucial addition to my research.

My study of the Laboratory School community has taken me to various national archives. Remarkably, the family of Katherine and Anna Camp saved decades of their letters, and Cornell University's Division of Rare and Manuscript Collections has three of the family's collections of papers. Mary Hill Swope's letters are held in Special Collections at the University of Illinois at Chicago Library and in the Institute Archives and Special Collections at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Library. A small number of the letters of Althea Harmer Bardeen, from a later period, are held at the University of Wisconsin's Steenbock Library in the Charles R. Bardeen Papers. The Southern Illinois University at Carbondale holds the John Dewey Papers, and its Center for Dewey Studies has painstakingly edited the philosopher's letters, which are available in digital form. The official records of the Laboratory School, including the teachers' reports, are held in the Special Collections Research Center, at the University of Chicago Library. I have also visited the archives at Bentley Library of the University of Michigan, Bryn Mawr College Library, Drexel University Library, Schlesinger Library at the Radcliffe Institute of Advanced Study, and Swarthmore College Library. I am grateful to the librarians at all of these institutions, as their gracious help made my visits to their libraries both pleasant and productive. These librarians always answered my email inquiries in a timely and careful manner, as have the librarians at the archives I was unable to visit: the Case Western Reserve University Archives, the Chautauqua Institution, Pratt Institute, and the Woods Hole Marine Biological Laboratories.

Archival collections are essential to the scholar of history; as important, to scholars in any field, is time to devote single-mindedly to writing. I am very grateful to the University of Wisconsin–Whitewater for granting me a semester of research leave. My deep thanks go to Chancellor Richard Telfer, Provost Christine Clements, Deans Jeffrey Barnett and Katharina Heyning, and Department Chairs Anthony Truog and Anne Zarinnia. The entire Department of Educational Foundations has been consistently supportive of my research, collaborating with Dean Barnett to offer me half-time research releases for two semesters prior to my full time leave. Our departmental assistant, Alicia Stone-Jackson, has helped me out in a number of ways, as have many at the University of Wisconsin–Whitewater’s Anderson Library, especially Branden McCreedy and Peg Murray. On all sorts of technological matters, Stanley Smoniewski offered patient assistance. Denise Ehlen, the director of the university’s Office of Research and Sponsored Projects, assisted me as I applied for research funds; I am grateful to the University of Wisconsin–Whitewater for the funding I received in support of my work on this project.

As I worked on my manuscript, I benefitted enormously from the helpful comments of several readers. David Durst, David Groth, Christopher Knief, and Amy Shuffelton read parts or all of the manuscript with careful attention, and offered constructive comments that improved my work and deepened my thinking. As a (then) anonymous reviewer, Robert Westbrook read my initial book proposal and offered a detailed and helpful response. I am grateful to all of these readers. I also want to thank my friend and graduate school adviser Carl Kaestle, who has long been an enthusiastic supporter of my work.

My original editor at Palgrave Macmillan, Julia Cohen, noticed my proposal and ushered it through the beginning of the publishing process. After she moved on from the company, Editor Burke Gerstenschlager and Assistant Samantha Hasey gracefully brought the manuscript through the next steps. At the copyediting stage, Afrin Kabir and Kristy Lilas completed the project with efficiency and professionalism. I am grateful for the attentiveness of everyone at Palgrave Macmillan whenever I needed questions answered.

In addition to all the above, an author needs a place to write. For me, this was my favorite Madison café—EVP. I was a regular there for many months, and I could always count on the right atmosphere in which to lose myself in my project.

Finally, I'm grateful to my brother David, my sisters Susu, Elizabeth, Kowkie, and Ellen, and their families for all their support, and I'm happy that we all live in the same country again. My husband, Chris, has long believed in my project, even when it meant he had to take up the slack in our home when my work kept me from it. My deep thanks go to him. And my two most lovely sources of inspiration are my daughters, Rosa and Lucia. I thank them both for being such delightful individuals.

My longest and deepest debts of gratitude are to my mother, Elizabeth Coughlin Durst, and my father, David Phelan Durst. This book is dedicated to their memories.