Acknowledgements

My first debt of gratitude is to my teachers. Thanks to those who were professors when this project first began, and who now are trusted colleagues and friends: Nancy Copeland, Elizabeth D. Harvey, Stephen Johnson, and Ric Knowles.

Many have read this manuscript, in whole or in part, at different stages of its development; still others have sat across tables or on porch chairs and helped me work through irritations both mild and massive. Thanks to Roberta Barker, Sylvia Hunter, M. J. Kidnie, Laura Levin, Marlis Schweitzer, Jenn Stephenson, Joanne Tompkins, and Pauline Wakeham. Without their generosity of time, energy, and spirit this book would look far different.

I have learned much from my students, who remind me every day that I have only begun to scratch the surface of the problems this book handles. Thanks to the participants in my 2005 graduate seminar, 'Architectures of Feminist Performance', and the participants in my two 2008 undergraduate senior seminars, both titled 'Performing Violence Against Women in Early Modern English Theatre'. Special thanks here to Allison Hargreaves, who is now more colleague than student and whose own work on violence against First Nations women in contemporary Canadian contexts is an inspiration to me.

For their many kindnesses, on-site support, and electronic assistance I owe a debt of gratitude to the staff at the Shakespeare Centre Library and Shakespeare Birthplace Trust, especially Helen Hargest; the staff at the Royal National Theatre archive, especially Gavin Clarke; the staff at the Stratford Shakespeare Festival archive, especially Ellen Charendoff; and the staff at Cheek by Jowl, especially Jacqui Honess-Martin.

This book could not have been completed without the Herculean efforts of my research assistants: Nadine Fladd, Karla Landells, Sarah Pesce, Elan Paulson, and Kristen Warder. Later, the help of Paula Kennedy, Steven Hall, and Penny Simmons at Palgrave proved essential.

Finally, thanks and love to my family: Linda Solga, Dieter Solga, and Jarret Hardie. And to B.M., for all the (life-saving) margaritas.

An early version of Chapter 2 was published in Theatre Journal, vol. 58, issue 1 (2006), pp. 53–72 (copyright The Johns Hopkins University Press); portions of Chapter 3 were published in Contemporary Theatre
