Acknowledgements

The research for this book dates back almost a decade, and the people who assisted me at the beginning of the project are many – thanks to Patricia Stamp, Robert Albritton, Michael Stevenson, Judith Hellman, Kenna Owoh, Jonathan Barker, Richard Stren, and Nakanyike Musisi. In Uganda, Tom Barton, Mary Sengo, Arnest Wabwire, Narithius Asinguirre, Abbey Nalwanga-Sebina, Harriet Birungi, and Bonnie Keller offered advice and research support, while Agnes Namusisi-Nabakka, and Annette, Nabuwanuka took great care of my daughter. The Makerere Institute of Social Research gave me institutional support, and the International Development Research Centre (Canada) provided me with funding. Juliet O'Manique's support at the beginning of my research was invaluable. Various parts of the book were generously reviewed by Teresa Healy, Katherine Scott, Margaret Barker, Christopher Gombay, John O'Manique, and Erin O'Manique.

Small parts of this book appear in an earlier paper, 'Global Neoliberalism and AIDS Policy: Institutional Responses to Africa's Pandemic', published in Studies in Political Economy, May 2004.

At Trent University thanks go to my new colleagues, among them Charmaine Eddy, Judy Pinto, and Erica No1.

The greatest debt is to my mother Patricia O'Manique, my father John O'Manique, to my sisters, and to my daughters Sophie and Claire and my husband Christie, for their constant support along the way.
