I would like to thank the following groups and individuals who have assisted with this project: Briar Towers at Palgrave for her initial interest in and acceptance of my proposal and her useful suggestions for extending this study, and subsequently my editor Jill Lake and her assistant editor Melanie Blair for their continued support and patience during the writing process; also production editor Vidhya Jayaprakash; St Jerome's University for travel funds that facilitated research at the Imperial War Museum and for a supportive collegial working environment; the archivists and staff at the Vera Brittain Archives, William Ready Collection, McMaster University; the Doris Lewis Rare Book Room, University of Waterloo; the Imperial War Museum Department of Documents and the Photograph Archives; John Baky and staff at the Imaginative Representations of the Vietnam War archives at the Connolly Library, La Salle University. Carolyn Dirks, St Jerome's librarian, generously assisted with the indexing. Marilyn Knapp Litt provided invaluable help in tracing the copyright holders of the women's poetry from the Vietnam War. In contributing to my work and the development of my ideas I would particularly like to thank Dr Andrea McKenzie for conversations about Brittain and Dr Subarno Chattarji for sharing his thinking on the Vietnam War. Above all, I want to thank Dr Jane Potter for her support throughout this project: her generosity included not only sending newspaper clippings and sharing books and scholarly expertise, but also warm hospitality (including excellent cooking) that gave me a base in London from which to work.

I would also like to thank the following copyright holders for permission to reprint material used in this book: Bobbie Trotter for 'The Muslim Mother' and 'How Do You Say I Love You in a War'; Penny Kettlewell for 'Sister Mary' and 'The Coffee Room Soldier'. Quotations from the Vera Brittain material are reproduced by permission of Mark Bostridge and Rebecca Williams, her literary executors. Extracts from Love Letters from the Front are reprinted by kind permission of Mercier Press Ltd., Cork. Extracts from Letters from a Soldier are reprinted with the permission of Faber and Faber. A revised version of the chapter 'Bodies Do Count', originally published in The Memory of Catastrophe, appears with permission of Manchester University Press. Access to the personal papers held in the archives of the Imperial War Museum has been crucially important for this project. I thank the following for permission to publish extracts from these collections: Joan Hadfield (Kirby); Denise K. Chapman (the papers of her late great-uncle, Private Arthur Higginson); Mrs Diana Hopkinson; K.M. Bigginton; V.M. Ball. The papers of Miss P. Warner, J. Westren and Lance Corporal William Anderson are also held in the Department of Documents at the Imperial War Museum; every effort has been made to contact the copyright holders but this has not been possible. The cover photograph 'A service in a cemetery near a Canadian hospital' appears courtesy of the Imperial War Museum, London. Every effort has been made to trace copyright holders. Where this has not been possible I would be glad to hear from those who have not received due acknowledgement.
