ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Grateful thanks are due to many whose encouragement and support have made it possible for me to write this book. I wish to express my gratitude to Alastair Fowler, with whom I had a brief exchange of letters on Milton's astronomy, for his generous reference to me in the preface to his second edition of Paradise Lost, which I found immensely encouraging. I am particularly grateful to Gordon Campbell for his friendship and support, to David Hawkes for help at a crucial juncture, to Christopher Ricks and Mary Ann Radzinowicz who were my supervisors when I was a young student, and to fellow Miltonists at the International Milton Symposiums at Vancouver, Bangor, York, and London for their lively interactions. I am particularly grateful to Nicholas Roe for his advice and encouragement.

Most of the research for this book was done at the Cambridge University Library. I wish to express my gratitude to the staff of the Library, in particular those in the Rare Books Room where I have spent many happy hours. On my visits to Cambridge while working on this book I have received immense support from Clare Hall as visiting fellow and later as life member. To many distinguished academics from various fields I have met over the years during my frequent visits to Cambridge University I am deeply grateful for providing an atmosphere of emotional security and intellectual sustenance.

I would like to thank my former colleagues and students at Jadavpur University and the lively group at the Centre for Studies in Romantic Literature (CSRL) for their warmth and constant encouragement.

An earlier version of chapter six was published as an essay in Milton and the Ends of Time, edited by Juliet Cummins (first published 2003, first paperback edition 2010) and published by Cambridge University Press, and is reprinted by permission of the publishers. Part of chapter five appeared in Milton Quarterly vol. 18, no. 5, March 1984, and is reprinted by permission of the editor.

I thank Brigitte Shull, commissioning editor of Palgrave Macmillan, for her interest in the book and Joanna Roberts and the production team for seeing the book through to press.
