International Relations and Development Series

Series Editors

André Liebich, Professor of International History and Politics, Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva, Switzerland

Marc Galvin, PhD, Head of Publications, Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva, Switzerland

As tomorrow's challenges become increasingly global and the North-South divide narrows, the International Relations and Development series edited by the Graduate Institute in Geneva relies on an approach to global problems that integrates international relations and development studies. It aims to promote research concentrating on global and multi-level governance, involving the United Nations and other international organisations as well as key regions and regional organisations. The distinctiveness of this series lies in the combination of a wide disciplinary range, including political science, international economics, international law, anthropology and history from an interdisciplinary perspective.

Acknowledgements

I am deeply grateful to Professor Pierre du Bois, my advisor at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies until his sudden passing in 2007. I am indebted to him for his guidance and advice, but also for his infallible encouragement and support throughout the five years during which I had the chance to work with him. I will remember his inexhaustible intellectual curiosity, his passion for his work, and his dedication to his students. I would also like to thank Professor Bruno Arcidiacono and Professor Gopalan Balachandran at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, as well as Professor Anne Deighton from the University of Oxford for their insightful comments on my work and for the encouragement they have given me all through the past years. To Professor Andre Liebich at the Graduate Institute, the editor of the present series, I am grateful for his guidance and his many valuable comments on the manuscript. My family and friends, too, were a constant source of support. For their precious help with editing the manuscript, I would particularly like to thank my parents and Gidon, who also translated the many French and German quotes and was always happy to challenge my ideas.
