

Government Formation in Multi-Level Settings

Comparative Territorial Politics

Series editors:

Charlie Jeffery, Professor of Politics, School of Social and Political Science, University of Edinburgh, UK.

Michael Keating, Professor of Politics, University of Aberdeen, UK.

Territorial politics is one of the most dynamic areas in contemporary political science. Devolution, regional government and federal reform have reshaped the architecture of government at sub-state and transnational levels, with profound implications for public policy, political competition, democracy and the nature of political community. Important policy fields such as health, education, agriculture, environment and economic development are managed at new spatial levels. Regions, stateless nations and metropolitan areas have become political arenas, contested by old and new political parties and interest groups. All of this is shaped by transnational integration and the rise of supranational and international bodies like the European Union, the North American Free Trade Area and the World Trade Organization.

The Comparative Territorial Politics series brings together monographs, edited collections and area studies that further scholarship in the field of territorial politics and policy, decentralization, federalism and regionalism. The series aims to be an outlet for innovative research in this area, grounded in political science, political geography, law, international relations and sociology.

Titles include:

Alain-G Gagnon and Michael Keating (editors)
POLITICAL AUTONOMY AND DIVIDED SOCIETIES
Imagining Democratic Alternatives in Complex Settings

Michel Seymour and Alain-G Gagnon (editors)

Acknowledgements

This book is the result of research at the Department of Political Science of the Vrije Universiteit Brussels (VUB), carried out with the generous funding of the 'GOA' Concerted Research Action project 'Politics beyond the state' and the Inter-University Attraction Pole project PARTIREP (Political participation and representation in modern democracies).

My gratitude first goes to Kris Deschouwer, who has guided me in the way a wise father looks after his child: I had to find the way on my own, but he was always there when I stumbled. I cannot imagine this project reaching fruition without his advice and encouragement. Three other faculty members – Patrick Stouthuysen, Theo Jans and Michel Huysseune – have also been patient listeners and good advisers over the years. Those who have been my fellow researchers either in Brussels (especially Martine Van Assche, Pieterjan De Vlieger, Christine Mahoney, Irina Tanasescu, Ionut Sasu, Jo Buelens, Koen Marchand and Sam Depauw) or in Barcelona, where I spent three fruitful months as a visiting researcher at the Pompeu Fabra University (Sunnee Billingsley, Andreu Orte and David Rivas), were wonderful colleagues with whom I shared many inspiring thoughts. Thank you all for your guidance and friendship.

I am also indebted to everyone I interviewed. The interviews were undoubtedly the most fascinating task of the whole research process. I am thankful for the kindness with which politicians and public officials, as well as a handful of academic experts, took the time to talk to me about coalition formation.

Over the years I presented various stages of this research at conferences and workshops. Numerous scholars I met on these occasions provided me with valuable feedback. Although there were many more than can be mentioned here, my thanks go to Elodie Fabre, Tània Verge, Marc Debus, Wilfried Swenden, Richard Katz, Peter Mair, Mariano Torcal, Francesc Pallarés, Kerstin Hamann, Bonnie Field, Josep Colomer, Patrick Dumont, Hanna Bäck, Josep Reniu, Lori Thorlakson, Pieter van Houten, Marco Steenbergen, Ferdinand Müller-Rommel, Eve Hepburn, Oscar Rodríguez and José Adrián García for their precious comments and support.

I would also like to thank a host of people who are special for various reasons: Gábor Tóka and Zsolt Enyedi from the Central European University, for stirring my appetite for political science research, and Marina Popescu, for taking the challenge of co-authoring with me when I was still a novice. Thanks to my mother, Aida Voștinaru, and to my brother, Victor Nechifor, for being such dedicated supporters and giving me the courage to pursue this project to its end.

And finally, my very special thanks go to my son. Even before you were born, you gave me such a tremendous amount of energy and confidence that the completion of this project seemed like a piece of cake. Four years later, you were still patiently sharing your mom with this and (too many) other work projects. Thank you, Matei Desmedt, for filling my heart with serenity and joy. This book is dedicated to you.
