

JAPAN AND THE COSMOPOLITAN
GOTHIC

This page intentionally left blank

JAPAN AND THE COSMOPOLITAN GOTHIC
SPECTERS OF MODERNITY

By
Michael J. Blouin

palgrave
macmillan

JAPAN AND THE COSMOPOLITAN GOTHIC

Copyright © Michael J. Blouin, 2013.

Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 2013 978-1-137-30521-3

Portions of Chapter 2 appeared as “The Eternal Embrace: Ghostly Maidens in Sidney McCall’s Fiction” by Michael J. Blouin in the Journal of American Studies, Volume 44, Issue 4 (November 2010), pp. 675–690.

Copyright 2010 Cambridge University Press. Reprinted with permission.

Portions of Chapter 5 appeared as “The Gizmo Effect: ‘Japan Inc.’, American Nightmares, and the Fissure of the Symbolic” by Michael J. Blouin in Horror Studies, Volume 2, Issue 01 (May 2011). Reprinted with permission. Portions of Chapter 6 appeared as “A Communal Haunt: ‘Synchronicity’ and ‘Betweenness’ in the Atemporal Films of Shimizu Takashi” by Michael J. Blouin in Asian Cinema, Volume 22, Issue 2 (Spring 2011). Reprinted with permission. Portions of Chapter 7 appeared as “A Western Wake: Difference and Doubt in Christopher Nolan’s Inception” by Michael J. Blouin in Extrapolation, Volume 52, Issue 3 (October 10, 2011). Reprinted with Permission

All rights reserved.

First published in 2013 by

PALGRAVE MACMILLAN®

in the United States—a division of St. Martin’s Press LLC, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10010.

Where this book is distributed in the UK, Europe and the rest of the World, this is by Palgrave Macmillan, a division of Macmillan Publishers Limited, registered in England, company number 785998, of Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS.

Palgrave Macmillan is the global academic imprint of the above companies and has companies and representatives throughout the world.

Palgrave® and Macmillan® are registered trademarks in the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and other countries.

ISBN 978-1-349-45478-5 ISBN 978-1-137-30522-0 (eBook)

DOI 10.1057/9781137305220

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Blouin, Michael J.

Japan and the cosmopolitan gothic : specters of modernity / by Michael J. Blouin.

pages cm

1. American literature—Japanese influences. 2. American literature—20th century—History and criticism. 3. Art, American—Japanese influences. 4. Japan—In literature. 5. Japan—In motion pictures. I. Title.

PS159.J3B58 2013

810'.9—dc23

2012042598

A catalogue record of the book is available from the British Library.

Design by Integra Software Services

First edition: April 2013

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

To the most important people in my life:
Mom and Kate

This page intentionally left blank

CONTENTS

List of Figures	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction: The Specters of a Wandering Mind	1
1 Ghosts and Spirits in Early Japanology	29
2 Ghostly Maidens in Sidney McCall's Fiction	47
3 Japonisme and the Female Gothic	65
4 Nuclear Criticism and a Deferred Reading of the Toho Terror	85
5 Japan Inc. and the American Nightmare	103
6 Atemporality and Communal Ethics in the Films of Shimizu Takashi	121
7 Difference and Doubt in Christopher Nolan's Inception	143
Conclusion: Haunted Echo Chambers	161
Notes	167
Bibliography	191
Index	205

This page intentionally left blank

FIGURES

- | | | |
|-----|---|-----|
| I.1 | The mystical subject matter is framed as though a traditional ukiyo-e print from Japan in Sidney Sime's "The Dirge of Shimono Kani" (1906) | 5 |
| I.2 | A sinister, exotic lantern carrier from the Far East whispers into an innocent young woman's ear in "The Mysterious Rose Garden" (1895) by Aubrey Beardsley | 6 |
| I.3 | This propaganda poster illustrates how the Japanese were dehumanized and made monstrous during World War II | 7 |
| 5.1 | As one gremlin plays with puppets for personal amusement, another gremlin gives the spectator a knowing glance in Gremlins (1984) | 117 |
| 5.2 | The line between reality and fantasy is compromised when gremlins start to shred through the movie screen in Gremlins (1984) | 118 |
| 6.1 | Three distinct temporal perspectives—Peter, Karen, and Kayako—all meet in this momentary reflection as Peter recognizes himself within Kayako's eye in The Grudge (2004) | 134 |
| 6.2 | Jack Torrance gazes down into a model display in The Shining (1980) | 138 |
| 6.3 | Sugiura gazes down into a model display in Reincarnation (2005) | 139 |
| 6.4 | Dr. Omori looks into his knife and sees the eyes of Sugiura in Reincarnation (2005) | 141 |
| 6.5 | Sugiura looks into a shard of glass and sees the eyes of Dr. Omori in Reincarnation (2005) | 141 |

This page intentionally left blank

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A manuscript is covered with fingerprints from countless individuals. I would like to begin by thanking my lovely wife, Kate, for her willingness to be there for me in every capacity and for her flexibility in moving to Michigan, Japan, and on to Tennessee. I am also blessed to have wonderful parents; in particular, my mother, Melissa, who worked tirelessly on my behalf growing up and never wavered in her support of my ambitions, deserves my undying gratitude. In addition, these pages retain traces of tall tales told on the Connecticut River; my love of a beautiful story was passed down from Bumpa. Other family members continue to provide support and inspiration including Nana, my talented and hilarious brothers Jesse and Josh, and my aunt Leslie. My brother Ethan assisted with technical aspects of the manuscript preparation and served as an invaluable conversation partner on all things film-related. Without these loved ones, the final product simply would not exist.

At Michigan State University, I need to thank my various mentors for their engagement and support during my tenure as a Spartan. In particular, Gary Hoppenstand always offered a smile and a word of encouragement, while David Stowe repeatedly went above and beyond the call of duty, purchasing numerous cups of coffee. Catherine Ryu invited me to assist with her course on US-Japan cultural relations and taught me a great deal in the process concerning how to articulate my ideas on the subject. Sayuri Guthrie-Shimizu fought for me and served as a friendly face in an audience across the Pacific, Ann Larabee offered keen insights into the chapter on Godzilla, while Scott Michaelsen taught me to appreciate board games and a great deal about critical theory. Most importantly of all, however, I must acknowledge Morgan Shipley and Jack Taylor. In addition to standing by me as incredible friends, and inspiring me to become a better scholar and a better human being, these two individuals shared countless laughs, labored alongside me in journeys through Hegel's murkiest prose, and as a result I believe that they have made this project far more compelling.

During my time in Japan, I met incredible individuals who were selfless and generous in ways I could never have anticipated. I am particularly indebted to Hiranuma Kimiko and Yamamoto Miyuki, who took me to Hearn's home in Matsue and aided me through numerous moments of being "lost in translation." Gavin Campbell, a professor at Doshisha University, provided pointed insight during early drafts of essays and helped me to sharpen my prose. It was during his seminar (zemi), in conversation with several graduate students, that this project really started to take form.

I must reach further back into the past to recognize the constant influence of faculty at the University of Vermont. Valerie Rohy assisted me in finding a style that worked; David Jenemann taught me to appreciate Adorno and to read cinematic texts in innovative ways; Todd McGowan never failed to startle me with his perceptions or to fuel my creative devices with his provocative thoughts. And I am indebted to Tony Magistrale (Coach) for jogging while discussing Stephen King and subsequently inspiring me to join this profession in the first place.

Finally, I wish to thank anonymous reviewers from a number of venues for their astute comments. The editorial team at Palgrave offered insightful feedback that assisted me in shaping the argument as a whole. Likewise, students in my course "U.S. Culture and the Japan Idea" at MSU as well as the students in my English seminar on Critical Theory at Milligan College all posed astute questions, forcing me to refine certain points of my argument. Heather Hoover, a colleague in the English department at Milligan, assisted me in tightening my work in places that sorely needed tightening.

This manuscript is therefore inspired by each of these invaluable people. Any insight found in the pages to follow cannot be separated from their influence; any errors or oversights confirm that I must continue to try and live up to the high standards they have set.