Acknowledgments

Early, often very different, versions of some sections of this book have appeared elsewhere as “‘We children were the in-betweens’: Character (De)Formation in Sons and Lovers,” Texas Studies in Literature and Language 43 (Summer 2000): 290–313; “Lawrence, Sons and Lovers, and the End of Sex,” The Hudson Review 52 (Summer 1999): 191–204; “Forster’s The Longest Journey and the Idea of Apprenticeship,” Texas Studies in Literature and Language 30 (Summer 1988): 179–97; “Forms of Misprision: The Early- and Mid-Victorian Reception of Goethe’s *Bildungs*idee,” University of Toronto Quarterly 57 (Summer 1988): 501–15; and “Maisie’s Moral Sense: Finding Out for Herself,” Nineteenth-Century Fiction 34 (1979): 154–72. I thank the editors for permission to reprint this material.

I’m grateful also for a research year, too long ago, granted by the Harvard-Mellon Fellowship Program, and lately to my colleague and friend Milton Bates, who encouraged me to return to this project and vetted chapters as I wrote and revised them. The work was in many ways easier because my sons, Matthew and Adam, continuing their own apprenticeships, were off to college. To them, and to their mother and my wife, Pauli, I owe profound thanks.
